

DRAWING THE LANDSCAPE WITH JOHN PIPER

This is John Piper's landscape. He was an artist who loved the rocks and mountains of Snowdonia. He visited north Wales about 70 years ago and returned time and time again to draw and paint his way through the mountains. Now it's your turn. Get drawing ...

FINISH THIS LANDSCAPE ...

Use your imagination to fill this big white space.

BEFORE AND AFTER ...

John Piper made the top picture on the spot and a year later he copied it at home, but it was much bigger and more colourful. Do the same thing by making a drawing whilst you're out and about. Back at home, copy it in a way you couldn't outside.

SPOT THE DIFFERENCE ...

List all the things you can see in each painting, then list all the things that look the same.

GO WILD!

The image shows a large, abstract landscape outline in a dark brown color. The outline is composed of several jagged, irregular lines that define a mountain range or a series of hills. The interior of the landscape is divided into various sections by dashed lines. These dashed lines are also in a dark brown color and are oriented in different directions, creating a grid-like pattern of sections. The overall style is simple and child-friendly, designed for a coloring or drawing activity. The text is in a blue, sans-serif font, and the 'GO WILD!' text is in a bold, italicized blue font.
